DR. BLACKWELL'S ADDRESS.

Rev. Dr. C. S. Blackwell, of Norfolk, addressed the convention, making a force ful and elegant address that thrilled the sudience. He calmly considered the question in all its bearings and vigorously repudiated the contentions that prohibition does not prohibit and that anti-liquor legislation is an infringement of personal liberty. He contended that all legislation is sumptuary more or less, and that no man it organized society can be an individualist absolutely. The address was clothed in chaste language, and was remforced with charming, frony and an occasional pertinent illustration. He admitted that there are honest men in the Hquor traffic, but was vigorous in his condemnation of the licensed traffic, and maintained that it is the crowning curse of the day, and strongly entrenched in money power, in political and social custom. The arraignment was terific—count upon count in the indictinent—illustration—fact pilled on fact—a chirlon call to Christian citizenship; a ringing rallying cry for the temperance hosts.

The conclusion of the oration was marked by loud appliques.

Any one desirous of studying fully the Gettysburg campaign and battle, will find the facts very fully set forth in the Southern Historical Society papers, especially in the papers of General J. A. The charge that Lee lost the battle of Gotysburg by obstinately refusing to take Longstreet's advice was first published by Swinton, in his book, "Army of the Potomac," which appeared in 1896, and the author gave General Longstreet as his authority for his statements. Soon after General Lee's death, there was published in the papers (presumably by General Longstreet's authority's letter written soon after the battle of Gettysburg by General Longstreet to his uncle, in which he clearly makes the charge against Lee, and intimates that if he (Longstreet) had been in command victory, instead of failure, would have resulted. General Longstreat afterwards published his views in The Century, and in his book, "From Manassas to Appemattax," there were replies from various Confederates, and claborate defenses of Longstreet, from Mr. P. Severe Criticism.

LIKE A CLAM MANY MONTHS

"I have been like a clam for eighteen months," said Mr. Wyatt. "I have at-concerning my business. In this respect I have closely followed out the rules set down by the board."

When he said this he had in mind the case of Policeman Foster, who was fined $20 by the board for expressing his opinion on a certain occasion a year ago. What brought out the remark from Officer Wyalt was the criticism of him made by Chief Howard at the Board meeting on Monday night.

The Chief said he had no confidence in Mr. Wyalt as an officer and would not detail him on a case in preference to any other man. In order to substan late what he said he started to go into details when Mr. Landerkin, of the Board, said that Mr. Wyalt's character was no. up for investigation, and requested the Chief to confine himself to the matter under consideration.

That closed the incident, which was simply a revival of the feeling that aross during the great gambare case hearings eighteen months ago, when Wyalt was criticised by members of the Board and when the Chief gave expressions of a similar month.

So far as could be learned yesterday the case will not come up before the Board.

So far as could be learned yesterday the matter as a personal one between Major Howard and Officer Wyalt, not important enough to call for an investigation.
